But Tommy O'Brien Got in the Next Flow with the Aid of a Bettle-Two Stories of a Breadway Comedy-They Diverge at a Yery Important Point, Though Both with Two Pretty, Giddy Girle.

nflicting stories are told of a very lively age, which occurred at Broadway and Twenty-eighth street, resulting in the arrest of that industrious, hard-fight-ing gambler, Tom O'Brien, and his arraignnent in the Jefferson Murket Police Court

Two pretty young women, well known in Capt. Reilly's tenderloin precinct, were the Capt. Reilly's tenderloin precinct, were the primary cause of the row. They had crossed Broadway under escort of Claude L. Goodwin, jr., Secretary to Hoyt & Thomas, authors of "A Brass Monkey," "A Tin Soldier" and similar farce comedies, when they were met in itom of the Brower House by O'Brien and a friend named Frank. This was about 9 o'clock last Tuesday night.

Frank nudged O'Brien and said: "I know them people. Wait and see some fun."

Then the following dialogue is alleged to have taken place between Frank and the girls:

irls:
"Ah, there, Dolly!"
"Heigho, Frank!"
"Come on; hurry up!" interjected Good-

"No: I want to see my Frank. Come here, Frank."
Frank walked towards them.
Thereupon Goodwin angrily demanded:
"Do you know these ladies?"
"Where? What ladies?" chaffed Frank, looking around in spoarent bewilderment.
This was too much for Goodwin, ir. He lifted his heavy cane and brought it down with smashing force on Frank's cranium, inflicting a slight scalp wound from which the blood flowed freely.

The funny man fell on the sidewalk. The girls screamed and dropped on their knees beside him. Goodwin was preparing to follow up his advantage when he saw O'Brien coming for him with blood in his eye.

Tommy has the reputation of being a b-a-a-d man.
Therefore Mr. Goodwin thought discretion the better part of valor, and he fied.
Bo far the story is as told by both parties; but now contradictions arise. Some people say that Goodwin dashed into the barbershop of the Brower House and dropped into the boss's chair, exclaiming: "Save me. Save me!"

"You're not next." was the bland; rejoinder.

"Tommy was there with a vengeance, if this account is the true one. He picked up a bottle of bay rum and smashed it on Mr. Good win's skull, cutting the scalp and letting loose a stream of blood that ruined the barber's chair.

"Slug my friends again, will you?" he sked, but not waiting for an answer hurried out of the shop.

He picked Frank up and carried him home. O'Brien lives at 347 West Forty-ninth street. The girls had disappeared.

Mr. Goodwin had his head bandaged and went some to ponder on the best method of setting square with the big, bad gambier, inally deciding to swear out a warrant for his arrest. He went to Jefferson Market Thursday and Justice Duffy granted him the warrant, It was given to Court Officer Gardiner to execute.

"We were all friends. It was only a drunken row," declared O'Brien. "Yes—all friends," assented Goodwin's

"Yes—all friends," assented Goodwin's brother.

"l'll adjourn the case until to-morrow morning. Have your brother here then," and the magistrate.

O'Brien was paroled in custody of his counsel. Going out of court, he whispered to his lawyer.

"l'll have the thing fixed before to-mortow."

That's right," advised the counsellor.

Rags, and will bless the honest finder who returns him. She said this morning:

"He is very young and his hair is short. Yesterday I was at Stern's, standing by the lift. The noise made by opening the door frightened Rags, and he ran away. I whistled for him, but he did not come, and I ran to find him. He was seen with a lady and then with a gentleman on Sixth avenue. Then all trace of him was lost.

"He is awfully cute. He doesn't know many tricks yet, though he will run and get his collar when he is told. He does not wear it in the house. He is named after a friend of mine who is always dressed in good clothes, but who looks like a ragbag, and whose brother calls him 'Rags.' He gave me the terrier and I brought it from Englanu only six weeks ago. I am afraid he may be ill streated and Rags is not used to anything like that, dear little chap."

Miss Smith appeared as a young woman with an American face, English accent and a stunning Japanese morning gown. Quite a cosmopolitan ensemble. She will be very grateful to any one who returns her young Rags. No "old rags" fellow need apply.

Stele White Pretending te Save.

Stole While Pretending to Save. Edward Rocks, aged seventeen, was held for trial at Jefferson Market this morning for stealing a gold watch belonging to the Mrs. Joseph Keller who was burned to death through a lamp explosion at $ Lafayette place Thursday night. Rocks stole the waten while pretending to aid Mrs. Keller. He said he lived at the Father Dramgoole's mission, opposite the Keller house.

Disadvantage of Growing Old.

A man in the West is to be hanged for a murder committed thirty years ago when he was forty years of age. This is one of the disadvantages of growing old. If the prisoner had died when he was sixty-five he would have escaped the gallows.

A Resemblance. [From the Pottsburg Chronicie.] "An editor is like a lawyer in one thing," remarked the Casual Caller as the snake editor was sabing over some ''galleys'' of matter.

DIAMONDS AND PRANKIE ARE GONE. The Widow Mills Connects Miss Raymond

$3,000 worth of diamonds and $100 in money, and has asked Inspector Byrnes to find and arrest Miss Frankie Raymond on a charge of stealing them.

Miss Frankie is described as a singularly beautiful brunette of twenty-two years, with black hair and eyes, and of medium height.

The Widow Mills says the young woman called on her six weeks ago, with an introduction from a friend, and by her clever talk induced Mrs. Mills to allow her to stay at 730 Sixth avenue. The girl told the widow that she was an actress, and that she was the daughter of a well-known journalist and an equally well-known actress. She went out frequently, stayed away all night and upon returning would always excuse herself by saying she bad been filling an engagement as elocutionist. On Tuesday Mrs. Mills told her she would have to leave, and from that time the young woman seemed to be very much excited.

On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Mills entered her bedroom and noticed that her bureau drawer was open. She discovered that her diamond jewelry, consisting of earrings, a bonnet pin, a diamond solitaire finger ring and two diamond cluster rings, valued in all at $3,000, was missing.

During her stay Mrs. Mills says the girl told her that she had been engaged to be married to William Abbett, son of ex-Gov. Leon Abbett, of New Jersey. Mr. Abbett called to see her several times and wrote letters oftener. A telegram was received from him yesterday afternoon, saying he would be over on Sunday, but he called later in the evening.

Inspector Byrnes's detectives have as yet been unable to find any trace of Miss Raymond.

THE RACE FOR CONGRESS.

Bold Tammany Makes Three Nominations

All opposition to the renomination of S. S. Cox in the Ninth District was withdrawn. Ex-Register John Reilly, who had been pressed by his friends to accept the nomination, would not permit his name to be used. He could have had the nomination if he had desired it or even if he had not interfered to prevent it. Mr. Cox's district comprises the Tenth. Twelfth and Fourteenth Assembly districts.

prevent it. Mr. Cox's district comprises the Tenth, Twelfth and Fourteenth Assembly districts.

The County Democracy will be compelled to indorse Mr. Cox's nomination.

The nomination of Ashbel P. Fitch by Tammany Hall in the Thirteenth District was a stroke of policy. He was elected two years ago as a Republican, but he voted for the Mills bill and has since then declared for Cleveland and Thurman and tariff Reform. Mr. Fitch is the legal adviser of the brewers and it is not likely that the brewers will do anything to injure the Tammany Hall County ticket.

Tammany Hall will not nominate or indorse Timothy J. Campbell for Congress, although his friends have worked hard for a union upon Campbell. The Wigwamites claim that if he had the union nomination he would have plenty of time to work for the County Democracy County Democracy ticket for Congress he will be kept busy looking after his own fences, especially in the Seventh Ward. Thursday and Justice Duffy granted him the warrant. It was given to Court Officer Gardiner to execute.

Gardiner is old and decrepit, and knew too much to attempt to arrest O'Brien alone. He went to the West Thirtieth street station and left the warrant with Capt. Reilly, who sent Detectives Brett and Hayes out for O'Brien last night. They arrested him just after he had purchased tickets at Palmer's Theatre.

O'Brien could not obtain bail, so he went to bed in a could station-house cell. In court this morning he admitted striking Goodwin, but said he hit him only with his fist, and that the affair took place in the salcon of the Browner House and not in the barber's ahop.

'Did you know Goodwin?' he was asked 'No. I never met him before,'' he replied. He refused to give Frank's last name or the name of the girl.

Goodwin did not appear in court. BLACKBALLS FOR MAYOR HEWITT.

They May Pessibly Be Cast &t the Harless Democrate Cisb Te-Night.

The Harlem Democratic Club will have a meeting to-night at which Mayor Hewitt's name will be proposed for membership. Sheriff Grant was elected a member some time ago.

The club's constitution prohibits the indorsement of any local candidate who is not a member of the club. Mayor Hewitt is now proposed in order that if elected a member a resolution will be presented indorsing his andidacy.

The Tammany Hall members of the Club will probably not oppose Mr. Hewitt's election as a member, but they will object to his indorsement for Mayor.

There is some prospect of another circus at to-night's meeting of the Club.
